A. OVERVIEW OF THE LAW REFORM COMMISSION

The Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia was created by the Government of Nova Scotia under the Law Reform Commission Act.¹ The Commission consists of between five and seven Commissioners (there are currently seven), an Executive Director and legal research and administrative staff. The Commission reports to the public and the elected representatives of Nova Scotia through the Attorney General of Nova Scotia. It is not, however, a government department, but an independent advisor to government. The Commissioners, whose appointment process is set out in the Act, currently serve part-time and come from different sectors of the community. One Commissioner is a judge appointed by the Governor in Council (provincial Cabinet) after consultation with the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia and the chief judge of the court of which the judge is a member; two are community representatives appointed by Cabinet; two are appointed by the Council of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society; and one person represents the full-time members of the Faculty of Law, Dalhousie University. One of the Commissioners must not be a graduate in law.

Mandate

The Commission's job is to review Nova Scotia law and to make recommendations for its improvement, modernization and reform. This may involve formulating new ideas and approaches to law, or proposing ways in which existing laws and the legal system can be made clearer or simpler to better serve the needs of the province. The Commission may choose a topic for law reform based upon suggestions received from government, lawyers, judges, or the community. A project may also follow a government request, generally known as a reference. Since 1991, the Commission has received four references from the Government. The references related respectively to the administrative justice system, the probate system, mental health provisions of the Hospitals Act, and adoption information law.²

The Commission does not make law in Nova Scotia; that task is performed in part by the elected Members of the House of Assembly. The Commission's reports and recommendations are, however, formally presented to the Attorney General and may result in changes to the law. Law is also made through the decisions of judges and appointed administrative decision-makers in cases that come before them.

A distinguishing characteristic of the Commission is its independence from government. Although in the past the Commission received a significant portion of funding from government, on average about one third of its money came from other sources. Government has a role in Commissioner selection, but does not choose all of the Commissioners, and no Commissioner is chosen to represent the Government. The Commission does undertake government requests for law reform projects, as far as is feasible, but apart from that requirement, is free to select the work it undertakes. So long as done in compliance with its object and powers under the Act, the Commission enjoys a free hand in terms of its activities: it may conduct meetings, hire people, perform research, publish reports, enter into cooperative arrangements with other entities, and decide how its funds are to be spent.

² Reports on the administrative justice, probate, and Hospitals Act projects have been completed. Following completion of background research, work on adoption information law was suspended after news in 2000 of the loss of government funding. The project was subsequently referred to a committee formed by the Minister of Community Services.

Law Reform Process

The Commission usually prepares two publications during the course of a project. The first publication, the Discussion Paper, sets out the Commission's preliminary suggestions for reform. The purpose of the Discussion Paper is to encourage people to consider and comment on the Commission's preliminary suggestions, as well as any issues, principles, and assumptions identified as having influenced the Commission's proposals for reform.

As part of the preparations for a Discussion Paper, the Commission generally forms an Advisory Group. The Advisory Group usually consists of Commission legal staff, and a number of community members, including government representatives, the judiciary, lawyers and other professionals, as well as participants from groups with interest or expertise in the topic being studied. The Group meets to identify and discuss relevant issues, as well as to propose to the Commission what should be included in a Discussion Paper.

The second publication is a Final Report, which is submitted to the Attorney General, and which is widely distributed. It contains the final recommendations of the Commission and, in some cases, a draft law. The Commission makes its final recommendations after it takes into account the responses it receives to the Discussion Paper. A Final Report is intended to provide a basis for the Government to consider and adopt the recommended reforms. The process adopted by the Commission, of seeking expert advice, consulting widely, synthesizing feedback, deliberating and report writing, is a time-consuming one. It is a process, however, which is designed to give greater weight and credibility to the final recommendations which result. The Commission does not engage in active advocacy regarding implementation of its recommendations beyond providing the recommendations to the Government and members of the public. The Commission has produced 36 project reports and 14 annual reports, which are listed at Appendix C. [All reports can be downloaded without cost from the Commission's website.]

Effects of Law Reform Work

Recommendations in Commission Final Reports have been brought into effect in a number of ways. Most recently, the Nova Scotia Government introduced new legislation: Involuntary Psychiatric Treatment Act (SNS 2005 c.42) thereby implementing many of the recommendations in the Commission's February 2002 Final Report on the Mental Health Provisions of the Hospitals Act. In 2004, the Government also amended the Mechanics' Lien Act, based upon the recommendations in the Commission's 2003 Final Report, Builders' Liens in Nova Scotia: Reform of the Mechanics' Lien Act. The influence of the Commission's work, however, goes beyond legislation. Certain Final Report recommendations have been implemented through government policies or protocols. Commission reports have also served an important educational function and have been used as course materials in high schools and at post-secondary institutions. Government, public interest groups, and other organizations have relied on Commission reports in order to develop awareness of issues and to focus discussions among interested people. For instance, Law Reform Agencies, a 2004 publication of the International Cooperation Group of the Federal Department of Justice, reflected the influence of Commission reports.

The contents of Commission reports have been referred to by a number of courts, including the Supreme Court of Canada, as part of their published case decisions. Judges have mentioned Commission reports in a number of contexts including interim payment of damages, matrimonial property, administrative law, the jury system, powers of attorney and the legal status of the child born outside of marriage.

Nova Scotia House of Assembly members from the Liberal, New Democratic, and Progressive Conservative parties have referred with approval to Commission reports or to Commission work generally, during the course of legislative debates.

Most of the Commission's time is spent choosing, discussing, and researching law reform subjects, followed by report writing and communicating the conclusions reached. Another significant role of Commission staff is responding to inquiries about the law or about aspects of the Commission's work. The Commission does not provide legal advice, nor does it intervene in individual cases. Nonetheless, Commission staff continue to respond to inquiries by telephone, by fax, by letter, by e-mail, or in person. In replying to inquiries, Commission staff have provided legal information, copies of Commission reports as well as other documents, and contact details for government departments and other relevant institutions.

Funding

The Commission is currently funded jointly (50% each) by the Nova Scotia Department of Justice and the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia. The Law Foundation, which funds work relating to the law, legal education, and the administration of justice, obtains its funds from the interest on lawyers' general trust accounts. The Law Foundation's objectives specifically include law reform.³

B. THE YEAR IN REVIEW 2005-2006

Work Program and Publications:

► The Rules Revision Project

The work of the Rules Revision Project continued to be the Commission's major preoccupation for the second year in a row. By May of 2005, all working groups had completed their work and submitted their final reports for the consideration of the Steering Committee. The working groups were as follows:

- Appeals
- Determinations Without Trial
- Discovery and Disclosure
- Early Dispute Resolution
- Evidence
- Judicial Review
- Management of Litigation
- Smaller Claims

All working group reports are posted on the Courts website (www.courts.ns.ca/Rules), and accessible through the Law Reform Commission's website (www.lawreform.ns.ca).

The principal drafters of the new rules are a Nova Scotia Supreme Court Judge, and a senior solicitor on secondment from the Department of Justice. The Drafters have been engaged in the drafting process on a full time basis since September of 2005.

The Steering Committee held further consultations with the Bar in Sydney (October 2005) and Halifax (November 2005).

Throughout the reporting period, the Commission has continued to provide research and perform related activities in support of the work of both the Steering Committee and the drafters of new rules. The Rules Revision project will continue to be the Commission's first priority until such time as it is completed. At present, it is anticipated that the Commission will continue to be regularly tasked with a significant number of responsibilities in support of this project, at least until the end of the 2006 calendar year.

► Vexatious Litigants

The Commission decided early in the reporting period, following representations from both the judiciary and the practicing Bar, to undertake a project on Vexatious Litigants.

In accordance with its usual practice, the Commission established an advisory group to assist in identifying and addressing issues relevant to the problem of vexatious litigants. The Commission published a Discussion Paper on vexatious litigants in December 2005. A Final Report with recommendations for government, although approved for publication by Commissioners in March 2006, was not returned from the printers until after the reporting period.

Vexatious litigants are people who persistently engage in legal proceedings, without having a valid claim to be heard by the courts. Vexatious litigants may sue in order to annoy, harass, or financially punish other people.

Vexatious litigants can waste the time of judges and administrative staff and prevent other, legitimate claims from being dealt with. Vexatious litigants can also force other people to incur otherwise unnecessary legal bills, by having to defend themselves against merit less claims. Vexatious litigants can therefore pose a serious problem for Nova Scotia's civil justice system. Although statistics aren't kept about the number of vexatious litigants in the province, it's clear that a small number of people can tie up a large amount of resources and cause a great deal of disruption by making groundless claims.

Vexatious litigants pose challenges to judicial systems across the country. Legislation or court rules meant to control vexatious litigants are in place respectively in 7 other provinces, as well as in the Supreme Court of Canada and the Federal Courts of Canada. Access to justice is a fundamental right in our society. Unfortunately, vexatious litigants can abuse that right, by repeatedly bringing to court claims which have no merit. To help ensure access to the courts for all, as well as to prevent the abuse of the courts' process and the waste of time and money, the Law Reform Commission suggests the adoption of a vexatious litigants statute in Nova Scotia.

The proposed statute would explicitly empower the courts to make an order against a vexatious litigant. The order would prevent a vexatious litigant from starting any new proceedings or continuing with an existing proceeding until court leave was granted to lift the order. A balanced approach would be used, one which empowers the courts to deal effectively with vexatious litigants, but which also permits someone subject to a court order to seek court leave to have the order lifted when circumstances change.

Work in Progress

► Rules Revision Project

As noted above, the Rules Revision Project will continue to be the Commission's priority project until its completion, now estimated to be in the Spring of 2007.

The work of this project and the proposed revisions to the Civil Procedure Rules represent a very worthwhile attempt to ameliorate some of the factors which contribute to costs, delays, and complexity in the civil justice system. The Law Reform Commission is pleased to have had the opportunity to contribute to this important work of rules revision. Ultimately, it is to be hoped that the end result will be a more accessible justice system for all Nova Scotians.

► Small Claims Court Project

In the fall of 2005, following a number of meetings with colleagues at Saint Mary's University, the Commission agreed to undertake a collaborative project with Saint Mary's which would examine the workings of the Small Claims Court. The Small Claims Court had been established some 25 years ago following recommendations of the Commission's predecessor, the Nova Scotia Law Reform Advisory Commission. The original raison d'être of the Small Claims Court was to make justice more accessible by providing citizens with an informal and inexpensive forum within which they could have their disputes resolved quickly without the necessity of retaining a lawyer. The current backdrop of the inaccessibility of the larger civil justice system, in all jurisdictions in Canada today - the exorbitant costs, delay and complexity - provided the stimulus for this project. The Commission is of the view that there is merit in examining the workings of the Small Claims Court from two perspectives, namely 1) how effectively it is responding to its original mandate, and 2) what might the system at large usefully learn, and possibly adopt, from the workings of the Small Claims Court. The Commission hopes that this project will contribute to a better understanding of how the justice system actually works. There is shockingly little empirical socio-legal research conducted in Canada on the civil justice system. Saint Mary's will provide the social science expertise for this project.

Although the project is still at the early stages of development, we have already had very useful meetings with Small Claims Court officials and adjudicators. We are also encouraged by the interest shown in this project by a number of agencies including the Canadian Forum on Civil Justice and the Law Commission of Canada.

► Grandparents-Grandchildren: Access

In January 2006, the Commission received a request from the Attorney General of Nova Scotia that it consider undertaking a project focused on the issue of grandparents' access to grandchildren, and any recommendations for reform. The Commission agreed to undertake this project, and before the end of the reporting period had initiated preliminary research and the establishment of a project advisory group. It is anticipated that a Discussion Paper on this topic will be issued during the fall of 2006.

► Partnership: Saint Mary's University

In May 2005, a meeting was held at Commission offices between the Commissioners, and the President and Vice-President of Saint Mary's University, and other senior administrators and faculty. Following that meeting, further discussions were held with our Saint Mary's partners, culminating in an agreement to pursue a collaborative project focused on the Small Claims Court. The Commission is very pleased about this tangible expression of its partnership with Saint Mary's and optimistic about future collaborative activities. The relocation of Commission offices to Saint Mary's University remains a priority objective. Our partnership has also been strengthened as a result of the recent appointment of Dr. John McMullan to the Commission's Board. Dr. McMullan is a professor in the Sociology and Criminology Department of the Faculty of Arts at Saint Mary's University. The interaction flows in the other direction as well, as a result of the Commission's Legal Research Counsel, William Laurence, being invited by Saint Mary's Faculty of Business to conduct a course on Business and the Law during the upcoming summer term.

External Activities and Relations

The Commission and its staff consider it particularly important to maintain close liaison with the practicing bar, the judiciary, the legal academic community, the Government and others.

The Commission's Legal Research Counsel, William Laurence, made a presentation on Vexatious Litigants to the Fall Forum of the Legislation and Law Reform Committee of the Nova Scotia Branch of the Canadian Bar Association.

Commission staff have attended and participated in a number of external meetings and conferences during the past year in addition to many less formal activities. In particular the Commission's Executive Director participated in the Annual Meetings of:

- ▶ the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society
- ▶ the Federation of Law Reform Agencies of Canada
- ▶ the Uniform Law Conference of Canada

In addition the Executive Director attended various meetings and events hosted by such organizations as the Legal Information Society of Nova Scotia, the Canadian Bar Association - Nova Scotia Branch, the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society and the Law Commission of Canada.

The Executive Director also met with the President and Commissioners of the Law Commission of Canada, the Treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada, the President of the Federation of Law Societies of Canada, the President of the Canadian Bar Association, the President and the Executive Director of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society.

The Commission has also continued to maintain and strengthen its relations with sister law reform bodies and other participants in the justice system. The Executive Director is the current President of the Federation of Law Reform Agencies of Canada, and in that capacity hosted a weekend workshop of member agencies in Kananaskis, Alberta in May 2005. It had been some four years since member agencies had the opportunity to get together and the workshop provided an excellent opportunity to reconnect, establish new friendships, discuss issues of mutual interest, and to strengthen the ties between member agencies. The meeting was made possible as a result of the financial support of the Law Commission of Canada, and the Alberta Law Reform Institute.

In March of 2006, the Executive Director, as part of a three person Canadian delegation, participated in a conference on judicial and law reform, in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

During the reporting period Commission work was mentioned in such news media as The Lawyers Weekly. Commission reports were also mentioned in Canadian Bar Association and Nova Scotia Barrister's Society publications, other law reform agencies' reports and Nova Scotia Government publications, the Queen's Law Journal and the Commonwealth Law Bulletin, a publication of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Division of the Commonwealth Secretariat.

The Commission's website continues to maintain an open invitation to the public for project suggestions and new ideas for law reform. As well, the Nova Scotia Courts website links to that of the Law Reform Commission for interaction concerning the Rules Revision Project.

Internal Administration and Organization

The Commission currently has a full roster of seven Commissioners. In the past year the Commissioners met on four occasions.

John E.S. Briggs continued to serve as Executive Director and General Counsel and William Laurence as Legal Research Counsel. The Commission's Administrative Assistant Mary Bowen, retired from the Commission at the end of the fiscal year.

The Commission was very fortunate to have had the exceptional services of Ms. Bowen for the past four years. Ms. Bowen made an outstanding contribution to the work of the Commission, a fact which was noted and commented upon by both the bench and the bar.

The Commission was also fortunate this year to continue to have the benefit of the services of William H. Charles, Q.C. as Special Counsel to the Commission. Mr. Charles has provided especially valuable assistance with respect to the Rules Revision Project.

Funding & Finances

During the past fiscal year, the Commission's core funding of $250,000 has been provided equally (50%) by the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia and the Government of Nova Scotia. In addition, the Government provided the Commission with $14,500 of supplementary funding in support of the work of the Rules Revision Project.

It should be noted, however, that (except for the supplementary amounts to support the Rules Revision Project), the Commission's budget has remained virtually static for the past five years at the level of $250,000 per annum.

The Commission's financial statement for the year ending 31 March 2006 is attached to this report as Appendix B.

The Commission continued to operate during the current fiscal year within its' available resources. The year began with a surplus of $14,116, which at year end stood at $5,242.

C. TAKING STOCK AND LOOKING AHEAD

In looking ahead, it may be instructive to take stock. This is the Commission's Fifteenth Annual Report since its establishment in 1991. In boxing if you're still standing at the end of 15 rounds, it may be considered a success. We are, of course, pleased to be still standing, particularly after the near demise of the Commission in 2000, and the ensuing financial uncertainty. More importantly, however, we do believe as we reflect on the past 15 years, that the Commission has made a worthwhile contribution to law reform in the Province of Nova Scotia.

During that time the Commission has produced as noted above 36 project reports, a number of which have resulted in legislation. Over the past several years, the Provincial Government has introduced legislation based upon Commission recommendations dealing with Builder's Liens and Involuntary Psychiatric Treatment. It is also noteworthy that while this report was being written, the Government's recently introduced legislation to amend the Wills Act, had passed second reading in the House with the unanimous support of all parties. It is important to underscore, however, that legislative action in response to Commission recommendations, while gratifying, is not the only nor always the most important measure of the success of an independent law reform agency.

Notwithstanding its' modest resources, which insofar as its' core funding is concerned, have remained the same over the past five years, the Commission has been able in recent years to significantly reduce the time taken to complete its projects.

It should go without saying that it is essential to the health of any legal system that it have an effective means to renew and reform itself. We believe that a law reform agency provides a very cost effective means of achieving just that.

There have been some recent encouraging signs internationally and in Canada of increasing interest in and support for independent law reform agencies. For example, the recently established Commonwealth Association of Law Reform Agencies is reflective of renewed support on the international front. Also, the Ontario Attorney General's announcement in January that Ontario will re-establish a law reform commission this year is very encouraging news. Five years ago, the Commission issued a report which in attempting to make the case for the Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia, spoke of the continuing need for law reform. The Commission's report stated:

"Our political and legal system is founded upon the principle of the rule of law. Adherence to that principle however, depends, in no small measure, on respect for the law and the system for the administration of justice. It is not too great a leap to suggest that systematic law reform activities have a significant and essential contribution to make to the maintenance of the rule of law."

Events since that time, both at home and abroad, have only re-enforced the Commission's assessment of five years ago.

The focus of law reform efforts cover quite a wide spectrum as we look across the country and around the world. In Afghanistan and Iraq for example, enormous human and financial resources are being expended in order to establish an environment within which the rule of law might function even in its most basic or primitive form. In our own hemisphere, Argentina, an emerging and fragile democracy, has yet to establish an independent judiciary, an essential adjunct to the rule of law.

Law reform concerns in Canada are perhaps of a different order of magnitude than those in many other parts of the world. While adherence to the principle of the rule of law is strong in Canada, it can only remain so as long as we attend to the ongoing law reform work which maintains that principle's strength. That is why reform of the civil justice system in Canada is such an important and pressing issue.

Law reform is best carried out as a collaborative enterprise, which engages legislators, the bench and bar, the academic community, interested groups and members of the public. Independent law reform agencies, whilst only one of the players on the field, have the potential to make a unique and valuable contribution to this process. We believe that the Nova Scotia Law Reform Commission yields good value to Nova Scotians in exchange for a very modest investment.

In summary, the 2005-2006 fiscal year was a positive one in which the Commission continued to make a critical contribution to the work of the Civil Procedures Rules Revision Project. In addition, the Commission completed or initiated several other projects whilst enhancing our support in the community. Notwithstanding continuing financial uncertainty, we enter the fiscal year 2006-07 with optimism and enthusiasm for our work.
