A. OVERVIEW OF THE LAW REFORM COMMISSION

The Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia was created by the Government of Nova Scotia under the *Law Reform Commission Act*¹ which came into force in 1991. The Commission consists of between five and seven Commissioners (there are currently seven), an Executive Director and legal research and administrative staff. The Commission reports to the public and the elected representatives of Nova Scotia through the Attorney General of Nova Scotia. It is not a government department, but an independent advisor to government. The Commissioners, whose appointment process is set out in the Act, currently serve part-time and come from different sectors of the community. One Commissioner is a judge appointed by the Governor in Council (provincial Cabinet) after consultation with the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia and the chief judge of the court of which the judge is a member; two are community representatives appointed by Cabinet; two are appointed by the Council of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society; and one person represents the faculty of the Schulich School of Law, Dalhousie University. One of the Commissioners must not be a graduate in law.

Mandate

The Commission's job is to review Nova Scotia law and to make recommendations for its improvement, modernization and reform. This may involve formulating new ideas and approaches to law, or proposing ways in which existing laws and the legal system can be made clearer or simpler to better serve the needs of the province.

The Commission may choose a topic for law reform based upon suggestions received from government, lawyers, judges, or the community. A project may also follow a government request, generally known as a reference. Since 1991, the Commission has received twelve such references from the Government. The references related respectively to the administrative justice system, the probate system, mental health provisions of the Hospitals Act, adoption information law,² grandparent-grandchild access, liability for contaminated sites arising under the Environment Act, garnishment of wages, the rule against perpetuities, enforcement of civil judgments, the Human Rights Act and "Seniors Only" housing, the Powers of Attorney Act, and the Builders' Lien Act. Eight of these have been received in the past five years, including three in March of 2010, and the Commission's work programme is now wholly occupied with government references.

The Commission does not make law in Nova Scotia; that task is performed by the elected Members of the provincial legislature. The Commission's reports and recommendations are, however, formally presented to the Attorney General and may result in new legislation or changes to existing laws.

A distinguishing characteristic of the Commission is its independence from government.

² Reports on the administrative justice, probate, Hospitals Act, grandparent-grandchild access, contaminated sites, and rule against perpetuities projects have been completed. Following completion of background research, work on adoption information law was suspended after news in 2000 of the loss of government funding. The project was subsequently referred to a committee formed by the Minister of Community Services.

Although the Commission receives a significant portion of funding from the Government of Nova Scotia, it also receives major funding support from the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia. Government has a role in Commissioner selection, but does not choose all of the Commissioners, and no Commissioner is appointed to represent the Government. The Commission undertakes government requests for law reform projects as far as is feasible, but is otherwise free to select the work it undertakes. Its analysis and recommendations are in no way determined or directed by the government. So long as done in compliance with its object and powers under the Act, the Commission enjoys a free hand in terms of deliberations, decisions and general management.

Law Reform Process

Each project follows a different plan and schedule, but there are some common elements. At the commencement of a project, the Commission typically forms an advisory group. The advisory group consists of community members, including government representatives, members of the judiciary, lawyers and other professionals, as well as academics and participants from groups with an interest or expertise in the topic being studied. The group meets to identify and discuss relevant issues, as well as to identify concrete proposals for reform. This first stage may also involve wider consultation among affected members of the public.

The Commission usually prepares two publications during the course of a project. The first publication, a discussion paper, sets out the Commission's preliminary proposals for reform, based in part on deliberations and advice from the advisory group. The purpose of the discussion paper is to encourage people to consider and comment on the Commission's preliminary proposals for reform, as well as any facts, issues, principles, and assumptions that have influenced those proposals. The discussion paper is circulated widely to those with a distinctive interest in the subject matter, as well as those with an interest in legislation and law reform generally.

The second publication is a final report, which is submitted to the Attorney General. It contains the final recommendations of the Commission and, in some cases, a draft law. The Commission makes its final recommendations after considering public responses to the discussion paper. The final report is intended to provide a basis for the Government to consider and adopt the recommended reforms.

The process adopted by the Commission, of seeking expert advice, consulting widely, synthesizing feedback, deliberating and report writing, is a time-consuming one. It is a process, however, which is designed to give greater weight and credibility to the final recommendations which result. The Commission does not engage in active advocacy regarding implementation of its recommendations, beyond providing its report to the Government and members of the public.

The Commission has produced 43 project papers and reports, and 19 annual reports, which are listed at Appendix C. All reports can be downloaded without cost from the Commission's website.

Effects of Law Reform Work

Recommendations in Commission Final Reports have been brought into effect in a number of ways. One way, which perhaps comes most readily to mind, is through incorporation in new or amended legislation. Since it began operations in 1991, many of the Commission's recommendations have been adopted directly in new legislation or concrete improvements to existing statutes. One of the Commission's first reports led to the creation of Nova Scotia's family maintenance enforcement program, under the Maintenance Enforcement Act. The Commission's reports on probate law and the law of wills resulted in a new Probate Act in 2000 and significant reforms to Nova Scotia's Wills Act in 2006. Its report on builders' liens resulted in the enactment of a new Builders' Lien Act in 2004. The Commission's recommendations in relation to mental health law formed the basis for many of the provisions of the Involuntary Psychiatric Treatment Act of 2005. A report on personal health care decisions provided the background for the recent Personal Directives Act of 2008. The Commission's 2006 report on vexatious litigants resulted in amendments to the Judicature Act in 2009, to deal with those who unduly strain the time and resources of our courts. In 2007, Alberta legislators changed Alberta law based on the Nova Scotia Commission's report.

The Commission's work continues to form the basis for important legislative initiatives. The Department of Environment is presently developing regulations under the Environment Act in respect of contaminated sites, relying on the Commission's 2009 report on that topic. The Department of Justice is currently developing legislation to abolish an antiquated but nevertheless troublesome rule of law called the rule against perpetuities, following the Commission's 2010 report recommending the abolition of that rule.

The influence of the Commission's work, however, goes beyond legislation. Certain recommendations have been implemented through government policies or protocols. Commission reports have also served an important educational function and have been used as course materials in high schools and at post-secondary institutions. The Law Reform Commission was the recipient of the Canadian Bar Association's 2007 Law Day Award for the Commission's efforts in promoting public legal education. Further, Government, public interest groups, and other organizations have relied on Commission reports in order to develop awareness of issues and to focus discussions among interested people. Commission staff regularly speak to interested groups concerning the Commission's research and recommendations.

Commission reports have been referred to by a number of courts, including the Supreme Court of Canada, as part of their published case decisions. Judges have considered Commission reports in a number of contexts, including interim payment of damages, matrimonial property, administrative law, the jury system, powers of attorney and the legal status of the child born outside of marriage.

Nova Scotia House of Assembly members from the Liberal, New Democratic, and Progressive Conservative parties have referred with approval to Commission reports or to Commission work generally, during the course of legislative debates.

Most of the Commission's time is spent choosing, discussing, and researching law reform subjects, followed by report writing and communicating the conclusions reached. Another significant role of Commission staff is responding to inquiries about the law or about aspects of the Commission's work. The Commission does not provide legal advice, nor does it intervene in individual cases. Nonetheless, Commission staff continue to respond to general inquiries by telephone, by fax, by letter, by e-mail, or in person. In replying to inquiries, Commission staff have provided legal information, copies of Commission reports as well as other documents, and contact details for government departments and other relevant institutions.

Funding

The Commission is currently funded jointly by the Government of Nova Scotia and the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia. The Law Foundation, which funds work relating to the law, legal education, and the administration of justice, obtains its funds from the interest on lawyers' general trust accounts. The Law Foundation's objectives specifically include law reform.³

B. THE YEAR IN REVIEW 2010-2011

Work Program and Publications

Completed Projects

The Rule Against Perpetuities

This project was referred to the Commission by the Attorney General in March 2010. The Commission was asked to provide its advice and recommendations on whether the rule against perpetuities should be retained, abolished or reformed. The reference followed a request from the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society to the government that the province abolish the rule.

The rule against perpetuities came into being in England in the late 17th century in order to prevent wealthy aristocratic landowners from tying up their properties in perpetuity. It is a highly complex and abstract rule, the breach of which - most typically through inadvertent errors in drafting complex wills and trusts - can result in testamentary dispositions and other property transfers being void. The circumstances giving rise to the rule, while never especially applicable to Nova Scotia, have long since changed if not disappeared. Modern taxation laws, and variation of trusts legislation, very much militate against the kind of problems which the rule was originally designed to address.

The Commission issued a discussion paper in July 2010 and a final report in December 2010. During consultations the Commission heard from practitioners and other members of the public. The overwhelming response was that the rule should simply be abolished. There was very little support for a reformed version of the rule.

In its final report, the Commission recommended abolition of the rule. Abolition will facilitate estate planning and other property transfers. As the Commission noted at the time of the release of the final report:

The rule against perpetuities is a common law rule which limits the duration of trusts. It also applies to other rights to property, such as an option to purchase or a condition that property must not be used for certain purposes. If full ownership of property will not be transferred to an intended beneficiary within 'a life or lives in being plus twenty-one years' then the gift or transfer is void. The property may be diverted to someone other than intended.

The rule is notorious amongst lawyers because of its complexity, and because its effect is to disinherit legitimate beneficiaries. This occurs most often as a result of inadvertent errors in drafting complex wills and trusts. Most other jurisdictions in Canada have scaled back the rule to limit some of its harsher effects. Nova Scotia remains one of the few jurisdictions which retain the original, common law rule.

In its Report, the Law Reform Commission proposes that Nova Scotia join Manitoba, Saskatchewan, a number of US states and other jurisdictions worldwide in completely abolishing the Rule.

The Commission relies on existing legal rules to fill the gap, including the courts' power to modify trusts. A long-term trust which is causing real difficulty can be modified by the court, if the adult beneficiaries all consent. The Commission recommends that this power be expanded, to allow the court to approve a variation even over the objection of a dissenting beneficiary in appropriate cases. The Commission further proposes a new court power to modify conditional or future property rights that are not subject to the courts' existing powers in relation to trusts.

The Commission recommends that the abolition be retrospective. Once abolished, the rule would no longer apply to wills, trusts and other property transfers, even those that were drafted prior to the date of abolition. If an interest in property had already vested, however, then the abolition would not apply.

Seniors-only Housing

This project was undertaken as a result of a reference to the Commission from the Attorney General in March 2010. The principal issue is whether or not there should be an amendment to the Nova Scotia Human Rights Act in order to facilitate the development of housing exclusively for seniors. Certain Canadian jurisdictions have provisions in their human rights legislation which exempts seniors-only housing from a complaint of age discrimination.

In December 2010 the Commission issued a discussion paper which proposed that the Human Rights Act should not contain such an exemption. The Commission invited comment from interested members of the public on this preliminary proposal, and a number of related issues.

Following consideration of submissions received on the Commission's Discussion Paper during the months of February and March, the preparation of a Final Report with recommendations to government was well advanced by the end of the reporting period. The Final Report was completed and transmitted to the Attorney General in April 2011. Based on submissions and further consultations, the Commission concluded that an exemption for seniors-only housing should not be introduced into the Nova Scotia Human Rights Act. The Commission was concerned that a blanket exemption would apply to any seniors-only restriction. That would include assisted living facilities but also a gated community, or a condo, or apartment building, reserved for seniors. The exemption would deny housing opportunities to younger adults and families with children. In the Commission's view, while that might be justifiable in certain cases, it would not be so in every case. The Act currently has a number of existing defences and exemptions, and the Commission concluded those were better than a blanket exemption.

As the Commission noted upon the publication of the Final Report:

The Act presently contains exemptions for 'bona fide requirements' - that is, where a form of alleged discrimination is necessary for important purposes - and also programs to remedy disadvantage of certain groups, including seniors. Either of those could be used to justify a seniors-only rule, depending on the circumstances. As well, under the Act, the Human Rights Commission has discretion to approve an age-based restrictions in advance, thereby shielding it from a complaint. The Report concludes that the Act's current provisions are better than a blanket exemption, because they require an assessment of the justification for each age limit, rather than permitting any age restriction, whether justified or not.

Work in Progress

Enforcement of Civil Judgments

This project had its origins in the Commission's work on the Small Claims Court. Users of the Small Claims Court, while generally satisfied with the workings of that court have consistently expressed dissatisfaction with the process for enforcing, or collecting on, judgments. The Department of Justice requested the Commission to examine the issue of enforcement in the civil justice system at large. This is an important project involving both access to, and the effectiveness of, the justice system.

This project also now includes a discrete enforcement question relating to the garnishment of wages of judgment debtors. This issue first arose during the passage of the new Civil Procedure Rules through the House of Assembly, and was referred to the Commission for study. The Commission decided that this question could be best dealt with in the context of the civil judgment enforcement project.

During the reporting period advisory group meetings and additional consultations were completed, and the Commission considered a draft Discussion Paper. The Commission expects to release a Discussion Paper in the summer of 2011.

The Builders' Lien Act

The Attorney General requested the Commission's recommendations with regard to several discrete questions relating to holdbacks under the Builders' Lien Act of 2004. That Act reflects the recommendations in the Commission's 2003 Report, Builders' Liens in Nova Scotia: Reform of the Mechanics' Lien Act. As well, the project examines whether and to what extent the Small Claims Court ought to have jurisdiction over builders' lien matters.

An Advisory Group has provided its advice and the Commission expects to publish a Discussion Paper later in 2011.

Powers of Attorney Act

The Attorney General requested the Commission's general recommendations on the improvement and modernization of the Powers of Attorney Act. Nova Scotia's Act currently lacks many of the provisions adopted in other jurisdictions to protect the donor of a power of attorney from financial abuse. The Commission has the opportunity to build on its previous work in this area; see Final Report: Enduring Powers of Attorney in Nova Scotia (September 1999). The Commission expects to convene an advisory group in the Fall of 2011, and to issue a discussion paper later in the year.

External Activities and Relations

The Commission and its staff consider it particularly important to maintain close liaison with the practicing Bar, the judiciary, the legal academic community, the Government, its Saint Mary's and Dalhousie University partners, and others.

Commission staff have attended and participated in a number of external meetings and conferences during the past year, in addition to many less formal activities. In particular the Commission's Executive Director and Legal Research Counsel participated in the Annual Meetings of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society, the Federation of Law Reform Agencies of Canada, and the Uniform Law Conference of Canada.

In October 2010 both the Executive Director and Legal Research Counsel participated in a very useful two day symposium/workshop of the Federation of Law Reform Agencies of Canada. The Commission's Legal Research Counsel also participated in a national conference hosted by the Canadian Centre for Elder Law and other organizations, held in October in Toronto.

During the past year, the Executive Director met with, amongst others, the Attorney General and Deputy Attorney General of Nova Scotia, the President and the Executive Director of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society, the President of the Canadian Bar Association-Nova Scotia Branch, the President and Vice-President of Saint Mary's University, the Director of the British Columbia Law Institute, the Director of the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the Executive Director of the Ontario Law Commission, and the President of the Federation of Law Reform Agencies of Canada.

Internal Administration and Organization

The Commission currently has seven Commissioners. In April 2010, Dr. Brian Joseph was appointed as a Commissioner. In December 2010 Commissioner Ronald MacDonald resigned. He was replaced in June of 2011, outside the reporting period, by D. Peter Mancini, Director of Service Delivery for the Nova Scotia Legal Aid Commission.

John E.S. Briggs continued to serve as Executive Director & General Counsel until 31 March 2011 at which time he stepped down after almost ten years of service with the Commission. By the end of the reporting period the Commission was pleased to announce the appointment of Angus Gibbon as the new Executive Director, commencing 1 April 2011.

The Commission continues to benefit from the services of Professor William H. Charles, Q.C. as Special Counsel to the Commission. Professor Charles has provided valuable assistance with respect to all Commission projects during the past year.

Funding & Finances

From the establishment of the Commission in 1991 until 2001, the Commission received on average two thirds of its funding from the Government of Nova Scotia, and the remaining one third from the Law Foundation of Nova Scotia. At the time of its establishment, it had been purposely decided in discussions between the Government and the Law Foundation that the Commission would be funded equally by both. It was believed that with this funding arrangement the Commission would be, and would be seen to be, more independent than if it received all of its funding from Government. The original (1991) Commission budget was $300,000 - the equivalent of $430,975 in today's dollars - of which it was expected that the Law Foundation and the provincial government would each provide half of the required core funding.

From April 2001 until March 31, 2004 all of the Commission funding was provided by the Law

Foundation of Nova Scotia. Since that time, until the present, the Commission has been funded by both the Law Foundation and the Government of Nova Scotia in varying shares.

During the reporting period, the Commission received core funding in the amount of $142,325 from the Law Foundation, and $184,824.00 from the Department of Justice. This was a slight shift from the 2009 – 2010 fiscal year, in which the Commission received $167,728.00 from the Law Foundation and $184,824.00 from the Department of Justice.

The Commission's financial statement for the year ending 31 March 2011 is attached to this report as Appendix B.

The 2010-11 fiscal year began with an accumulated surplus of $54,764, which included $36,739 of accrued project funds. This surplus was used to offset reductions in funding from that received in previous years. Although the Commission continued to operate during the current fiscal year within its available financial resources this was only accomplished by allocating accrued funds to current expenses and engaging in substantial cost cutting measures.

C. THE LAW REFORM COMMISSION'S 20TH ANNIVERSARY: REFLECTIONS

This year marks the 20th anniversary of the Law Reform Commission since it began operation in early 1991. Since that time the Commission has completed some 43 papers and reports covering such diverse areas of law as the administration of justice, health, environment, family, human rights, torts, wills, estates and probate, commercial, contract and property law.

Law reform is an essential ingredient in preserving public confidence in the effectiveness and accessibility of the law, which in turn is so necessary to maintaining the rule of law. Law reform and its funding is first and foremost the responsibility of government. It is central to the very reason for the existence of government that it uphold and advance the rule of law. Systematic and regular attention to law reform is critical to the ongoing and vitally important challenge of maintaining the rule of law. No legislative enactment can be the final word on any subject. There will always be issues which arise that require the re-examination of legislation, and issues continually arise that have not previously been addressed. The need for law reform in Nova Scotia is as on-going and compelling as ever. The Law Reform Commission represents an intelligent and cost effective device for attending to these issues.

At its best, law reform is a collaborative effort involving the judiciary, the practicing bar, legislators, government officials, the academic community, advocacy groups and the public, all of whom have key roles to play in the process.

Generally, government does not have the time or resources to carry out law reform activities in house on a scale and with the singular focus of a law reform agency - unless it happens to be a priority on the political agenda. Nor is government able to carry out law reform with the distinctive credibility of an independent law reform agency. The independence of the Law Reform Commission is an important asset, both in developing creative and thoughtful recommendations for reform, and when engaging in consultations with external stakeholders that may be prone to distrust or cynicism with government.

There is no satisfactory substitute for systematic law reform carried out by an independent body with permanent staff and permanent funding. Nova Scotia's historical experience with the shortcomings of part time, ad hoc, voluntary attempts at law reform prior to 1991 underscored the need for a permanent law reform agency. Ultimately the lessons learned from that experience resulted in the establishment of the Commission twenty years ago.

In those 20 years it has become clear just how indispensable and important is the Commission's work. It is significant, for instance, that while the Commission received only four references from the provincial government in its first fifteen years, in the last five years it has received eight. Its work programme is currently entirely occupied by requests from the Government of Nova Scotia.

The Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia provides a unique and significant contribution to the reform of the province's laws, at very modest cost. In this regard, the Commission has been able over the past twenty years to leverage a remarkable amount of expertise from the legal profession, the judiciary, and other sectors. The Commission provides an institutional setting in which to bring together public interests and legal expertise in the service of a more effective and more accessible justice system. The value of that pro bono contribution far exceeds the modest annual funding required to sustain the Commission's operation. The costs - both socially and economically - of failing to maintain our legal infrastructure by reforming our laws on a systematic basis far outweigh the modest expenditure involved in funding a permanent law reform body.

As the Commission begins its 21st year of continuous operation it is completing work on civil enforcement of judgments, the Powers of Attorney Act and the Builders' Lien Act. Each of these areas of law potentially affects the social and economic well being of many Nova Scotians. In addition, in the coming year the Commission expects to undertake a project on reform of family law in Nova Scotia. This is an area of law beset with vexing challenges not only in Nova Scotia but in every jurisdiction in Canada. Ultimately improvements and modernization of that area of Nova Scotia law will provide widespread benefits to the people of the province.

In summary, although the future of the Commission is always a matter of concern, the 2010 - 2011 fiscal year has been very positive. The Commission completed its work on the rule against perpetuities with a final report and recommendations to government in December 2010. It also completed a discussion paper on seniors-only housing, followed shortly after the end of this reporting period by its final report on that subject. Work on several other projects has been well advanced during the past year. The Commission begins its 21st year of operations re-invigorated for the important work ahead.

Farewell

Finally, with this Report the Commission marks the end of the tenure of John E.S. Briggs as Executive Director and General Counsel. John came to the Commission in challenging times, faced with the loss of provincial funding and a limited three-year grant from the Law Foundation. With the clock ticking, he was able to restore the Commission to financial health with the resumption of provincial funding, and to see it through the next several productive years. In that time, the Commission completed several projects, a number of which were adopted directly into legislation, or which will be in due course. He broadened the Commission's scope of endeavor and deepened its connection to the various stakeholders in the Nova Scotia justice system by taking on challenging, collaborative projects such as the revision of the Nova Scotia Civil Procedure Rules. As evidenced by the Commission's increasing number of projects at the behest of the provincial government, he firmly established the Commission as an indispensable component of the legal architecture of Nova Scotia.

John did not work alone over the past ten years, and he would be the first to pass the credit for the Commission's success to others - the Commissioners whom he was honoured to counsel, the staff whom he was pleased to guide and support, and the wide variety of legal practitioners, jurists and thinkers, and other justice system stakeholders whose advice and contributions he constantly sought. But at this time the Commission is pleased to have the opportunity to shine the light where it belongs, and offer its enduring thanks.
